

Carañahui Cave Qeswachaka Bridge

Full Day

OVERVIEW AND HIGHLIGHTS

Get ready for an adventure on this full-day tour to Qaranahui Cave and the Qeswachaka Hanging Bridge from Cusco. Walk across the last great Inca bridge at Qeswachaka, which is hand-woven from natural fibers, before gearing up to search for stalactites and stalagmites inside the massive Qaranahui Cave. This tour is the perfect way to get your fix of nature after a stay in the city, and it includes all entrance fees, transportation, and lunch. "Q'eswachaka" is a native name formed by two Quechua words: "Q'eswa" meaning "braid" and "Chaka" meaning "Bridge". This bridge is built in the original Inca way made of a special woven grass (q'oya). The material and construction techniques of the Q'eswachaka Cusco bridge have been passed down from generation to generation since the time of the Incas since the first bridge was built in the 15th century.

Besides, you can observe in the surroundings a typical vegetation of the area as ichu or straw, cantuta, queñoales, and in this area you can also find Andean foxes, viscachas, among others.

● CUSCO - QESWACHAKA BRIDGE - QARAÑAHUI CAVE - CUSCO

We will pick you up from your hotel at 5am approximately in our private transportation, in which we will drive to Cusipata for 2 hours south from Cusco when we will have the breakfast at a local restaurant and continue crossing Pomacanchis Lake (3,600m/11,811ft.). Then we will reach the Qeswachaka Bridge. This is the last used Inca bridge over the Apurimac River and the grass fibers of the bridge are renewed each year in an "annual construction of the bridge fiesta".

Then we will advance near the entrance to the Qarañahui cave. After some view stops, the tour guide will provide you the equipment to explore the cave for several hours finding stalagmites and some stalactites.

We will return to have lunch at the same local restaurant and return to Cusco in the afternoon.
